

SHIERS OF SYRIA WORSHIP A DEVIL

Taus Malak, Fallen Angel, is Their Patron Saint.

Allepo, Syria.—Taus Malak, the fallen angel whom God expelled from heaven, is the patron saint of the shiars, not those whose handsome profiles shown on the American screen have under flippers' hearts flutter.

The tribe of the Yazidites, worshippers of satan, from which the original shiars spring, are now living from cattle raising. They number about 12,000 and their habitat is north of Aleppo near the Taurus Mountains. An other branch is to be found at Khilfar, a small town in the vicinity of Diarbekir.

Shiars claim they can trace their ancestry from heaven, being direct descendants of Shik Churaf Kidib, or "the moon." Another early shiars was Amrillah, which means "pillar supporting heaven," while a third one was directly related to the sun.

Some of the present-day shiars claim to have the power of miracles in rendering infirmities, such as leprosy and scorpions.

"Why do you worship the devil?" asked an American, who had been bitten by a poisonous insect, and de- scribed of ascertaining the medicinal power of the shiars, had sent for one. Satan is the source of all evil and if we know him we cannot avoid him. Satan, on the contrary, is the source of kindness and good. He has nothing to fear from him," was the way the reply was translated.

Shiars marry only the daughters of other shiars. The marriage ceremony is very simple. It is a series of mutual consent between the bride and the bridegroom, expressed before one of the other shiars. Both newlyweds are then branded with red ink on the shoulders and forehead.

The shiars perform the ceremony then takes a branch of a tree and breaking it in two says: "Blessing be united until death parts you as force has broken this branch."

SEARCH OF FOURTEEN YEARS BRINGS GOLD

Oakland, Calif.—Lee Silver and Bert Warrington hold the secret. Lee is a hard-bitten prospector who was driven here on the Columbia River Hunt, he said "it was a crime to take the money."

The commissioner of police for St. Thomas is M. J. Nolan, former captain in the New York police department, in charge of the West Third Street station. New York methods have put the danger on St. Thomas, intentions to support home industries and have its own little crime wave.

"There isn't a creek of any kind in St. Thomas," Commissioner Nolan said upon his arrival. "It has become so quiet down here that I'm ashamed to go around and collect my salary."

In order not to feel guilty of a holiday, Commissioner Nolan said he would for them to send his salary to him.

On a visit to the Virgin Islands six years ago to see his son, Dr. Roger Nolan of St. Croix, he told St. Thomas officials of New York's method of clearing up the underworld. At the time pickpockets, thieves and holdup men had an open season all year round. The officials entered in invitation to Captain Nolan to apply these methods.

He came, he saw, he established a law. He had the police force and in two weeks the crime wave disappeared like a mirage in a hot weather. The only trouble left to the police, Commissioner Nolan said, "is that neither my force nor I have anything to do."

Two lowly Mexican sheep herders wandered into Sonora one morning with nuggets valued at $15,000. Poor the tried to solve the mystery of where they had discovered them.
